

John Parker Stewart

Corporate unifier, management coach, speaker, seminar leader, trainer and author.

After attending the University of Colorado, Brigham Young University and finishing his Masters thesis in London, John taught and worked on his doctorate in organizational behavior at Michigan State University. John completed additional doctoral work on executive performance under Peter Drucker at the Claremont Graduate School of Business.

John headed human resource development for 26,000 employees at Lockheed Missiles and Space Company. After moving to corporate, he worked with Lockheed divisions worldwide and initiated, designed and taught the Lockheed Executive Institutes. In 1980, he founded Stewart Systems, Inc., a consulting firm specializing in helping companies achieve significant improvement in overall performance.

John was chosen American Society for Training & Development National Trainer of the Year (Trainer's Choice) for two consecutive years. He has made two award winning videos "Team of Champions" and "Keys to Employee Commitment." He also is extensively involved in consulting with mergers and acquisitions in developing productive alliances and integrated cultures. He and his wife, Debra, have four sons and reside in Lake Oswego, Oregon.